

THE HEART OF IT ALL

[Joy Mills, From Inner to Outer Transformation – Lectures on ‘The Voice of the Silence’, Uitgeverij der Theosofische Vereniging in Nederland, Amsterdam, first edition, 1996, reprint 2002]

“my present unique occasion” which is about being with what is in front of us in the present moment.

It is not about what we think, but what actually is and what action we are taking at the time. How are we responding to each of our “present unique occasion”? Do we realize how extraordinary each moment is and how many different forces must line up for an event to happen? If this is so, then shouldn’t we honor the occasion by bringing our best being forward no matter what?

[Meister Eckhart, Selected Writings, translated by Oliver Davis, Penguin Classics, 1994]

As long as I am this or that, or have this or that, I am not all things and I have not all things. Become pure till you neither have either this or that; then you are omnipresent and, being neither this nor that, are all things.
